

Apostrophe to Vanity -

Sept 17, 2010

'I thought I was crazy because I thought you should be proud "crazy" because I thought after all you are my reflection, my mirror and would say my true self - but - ~~it's true that only other people~~ after all only other people see my face, see me, so what good are you?

The ~~same~~ voice inside that's constantly saying I'm not good enough how true you? ~~too fat?~~ how true you? too ugly? how true you? too selfish?

How do I dare sit you dictate my worth my ~~own~~ ~~self~~ mirror of myself you were here to help me - I know ~~to achieve~~ to care about others' feelings 38

to be better, but you only half succeeded Everyone else sees this person this wash creation, this independent perfection

But turn your mirror inward! Oh Vanity, + there is a dark, squat, shriveled, impression ~~side~~ the neglected, aged

No, I release you of your duties - I'm now on the mirror shall be the type of my soul ~~as I see myself~~
+ the respondent looks of those who look upon me with love.